Q: How can I get this button to be full width and height of the button group? I am trying to style the buttons in a button group, but I can't get the height and width to be the same as the border. .container { display: table; width: 100%; } .row { display: table-row; } .button { border: 1px solid #aaa; background-color: #f9f9f9; display: inline-block; padding: 10px 20px; text-align: center; font-size: 25px; font-weight: bold; font-family: 'Raleway', sans-serif; text-transform: uppercase; color: #1e1e1e; margin: 30px 0px 20px 0px; } .button:last-child { margin: 0px 0px 20px 0px; } Document

What's New in the?

The present invention relates to novel photoresist compositions, and, in particular, to novel photoresist compositions which contain diazonaphthoquinone-2-sulfonic acid and to the use of such compositions for microlithography. Photoresists are compositions, which change their solubility in a developer solution under the influence of actinic radiation. Photoresists are commonly utilized as a patterning medium in the fabrication of microelectronic devices such as semiconductor chips and displays. Conventional photoresists are made of a polymeric material which is formed into a film or coating on a substrate such as silicon or glass. Conventional photoresist materials generally have an upper and lower surface. When the coating is exposed to light of a certain wavelength (e.g., from a mercury arc), the upper surface becomes more hydrophilic and the lower surface becomes more hydrophobic. If a developer solution is applied to the coated surface of the substrate, and the developer solution is able to wet and wet out the hydrophilic upper surface of the photoresist, but is not able to wet the hydrophobic photoresist coating at the lower surface, then the exposed upper surface will be dissolved and removed from the substrate and only the unexposed lower surface will be left. A positive image of the substrate surface can be obtained in this way. If a developer solution is applied to the coated surface of the substrate, and the developer solution is able to wet out both the upper and lower photoresist surfaces, then the exposed upper surface will be dissolved and removed from the substrate, and the exposed lower surface will be dissolved, but the unexposed upper surface will remain on the substrate and form a negative image of the substrate surface. A problem associated with conventional positive photoresist compositions is that they tend to become less soluble in a developer solution over time. As this occurs, the contrast of the imaged resist decreases, and the degree to which the exposed surface of the substrate is removed by the developer solution increases. In recent years, chemically amplified photoresists have become widely used as a result of their dramatic improvement in resolution. Chemically amplified photoresists contain a photoacid generator, which generates protonic acid on radiation exposure. Using these materials, highly resolved images can be obtained, since the solubility of the exposed area of the resist in a developer solution is dramatically increased by the protonic acid generated by the photoacid generator. Photoresist compositions that
