The latest venture from Bethesda, Elder Scrolls Online looks as splendid as its setting, as depicted in the trailer shown below. This mighty close-up of the game's world, which follows on from the trailer released earlier this week, shows a map of the continent floating in a golden void. It is built around a futuristic city called Cyrodiil, where great heroes ruled over the continent of Tamriel. These greats, the Quelaag, Zura and Tamriel's greatest hero, helped to create the city, which is designed to be a living, breathing metropolis. "Yes, this is a new kind of world where the greatest cities of Tamriel were created by heroes and giants who blazed trails across a land of wilderness," says game producer, Matt Firor. "There's something magical about that." The most important thing, says Firor, is that players have more of an active role in how the continent evolves - and how their own cities develop. Rather than just being a backdrop, Tamriel will be a living part of the game. "This is an MMO, and it is a world where you can affect the game and change the world around you," says Firor. "I wanted to ensure that that was absolutely not the case in Oblivion, but it was. "In Oblivion, the lands, cities, and people were all so similar. They were unchanging. They were quite bland. The world felt so similar. If I went from the desert to the beaches to the mountains it was the same thing. That was a huge problem with the game, because I was like, 'Why am I not enjoying this game?' I didn't really see any difference. "In The Elder Scrolls Online, Tamriel has a tremendous amount of variation," he continued. "There is mountains, there are seashores, there are bodies of water, there are deserts, there are swamps. There are seven different biomes to explore, and so if you want to, you can 6d1f23a050
